FIRE IN SING SING FOLLOWS MUTINY BY 180 CONVICTS

Warden Clancy directed a detachment of men in a fight on the flames. and while the battle was being waged scores of convicts, locked in their cells, were howling to be released.

Only half a dozen "trustles" were permitted to work with the guards in fighting the fire. A call was see in to the Ossining Department, but before apparatus arrived the flames had been checked. Clancy then "read the riot act" to the mutineers.

"You fellows have been treated nicely here," he said. "If any more of this foolish business takes place you will find yourselves in plenty of trouble."

His words had the effect of calmin the turbulent prisoners.

"The trouble is all over," said Clancy this morning. "It didn't amount to anything from the start. Just say it is all over."

Clancy declared the most serious part of the trouble developed yesterday afternoon, when the 180 convicts employed in the knitting shop threw down their tools when one of their number blew a whistle. Announcing they did not intend to work longer they asked the guards in the shop what they intended doing about it.

The guards responded by ringing which brought assistance to them. The mutineers they went The mutineers then were peaceably enough, but after being looked in they began beating on the barred doors and shouting. The Warden believed he had mastered the situation at that time.

The warden retired early last eve ning and he was sleeping coundly when he was aroused by the alarm for a fire in the enamel shop. This place is connected with the wagon factory, which was set on fire last summer as a protest against the removal of Warden Kennedy and the appointment of

The convicts have been surly ever since Gov. Glynn refused to sign the one-year parole bill.
